Dreaded An Operation More Than Anything

Tried Fruitola and Traxo and Has Never Since Been Troubled
With Gall-stones.

Mrs. Mary E. Franse, whose address is West Point, Neb., Box 411, has written to the Pinus laboratories a very strong endorsement of Fruitola and Traxo. In her letter, Mrs. Franse says: "About ten years ago I was about to undergo an operation for gall-stones when I heard of your medicine. Dreading an operation above everything I determined to try Fruitola and Traxo and have never been sorry I did so, as I have never been troubled with gall-stones since."

Fruitola is a powerful lubricant for the intestinal organs, and one dose is usually sufficient to give ample evidence of its efficacy. It softens the congested masses, disintegrates the hardened particles that occasion so much suffering, and expels the accumulated waste to the intense relief of the patient. Following a dose of Fruitola, Tri-o should be taken three or four times a day in order to avoid and restore the system that has been weakened and run down by constant suffering. It is a splendid tonic, acting on the liver and stomach most beneficially.

MRS. MARY E. FRANSE

In the files of the Pinus laboratories at Monticello, Ill., are many letters gratefully acknowledging the satisfactory results following the use of Fruitola and Traxo. Arrangements have been made for the distribution of these excellent remedies by leading drug stores everywhere. In Anderson, Fruitola and Traxo can be obtained at Evans' Pharmacy, three stores.

VISCOUNT BRYCE IS TAKING WAR QUIETLY

Former Ambassador to U. S. Sees Historical Value of Passing Events.

London, Aug. 6.—(Correspondence of The Associated Press.)—The noise of war is all-prevailing here and little but war is in the minds of people. But out of the blackness of war details, accounts of battles, long casualty lists, war loans, recruiting and ammunition supplies, the student habits of Viscount Bryce, in viewing the historical value of events permit him to detach himself from the day-to-day turmoil and take his bearings on some of the larger results that may come out of the struggle.

When seen in his study by a representative of The Associated Press Lord Bryce showed the same keen interest in American affairs that has made him an authority on them since his American Commonwealth appeared, and the same intimate acquaintance with American men and affairs, political and party questions and public issues. He is little changed from his days as ambassador at Washington; the same alertness and intense keenness of manner; his shaggy full beard and heavy eye-brows now quite white; every movement having the vigor of a man of middle life. Since he became a member of the House of Lords he gives much attention to the pressing questions now crowding on Parliament, taking quarters within easy reach of the upper chamber at Westminster, where he often joins in the serious and rather heavy debates of that august body. And yet he finds time for his literary work and for gauging some of the historical results likely or possible to survive the conflict.

The interest taken in America in Lord Bryce's notable report on "Alleged Atrocities Committed by the Germans in Belgium" was a source of much satisfaction to him. "The Committee over which I presided reached conclusions very slowly and reluctantly," he said. "I personally have many friends in Germany and I could hardly believe that such things could be true or that they knew such things were happening. But beginning with an open mind, and even in doubt, the truth of the charges was finally forced upon all the committee by the accumulation of evidence. As it is, I cannot believe the German people know what is going on. The receive only the military version and the people are not aware of the real conditions, not only as to Belgium but in the whole range of events connected with the war. The military party with von Bernhardi spirit is still completely dominant."

Reference was made in the course of the talk to Lord Bryce's pamphlet on "Neutral Nations and The War" and to some interpretations drawn from it on some of the larger results which might come out of the war. Although these interpretations were not intended at the time for publication, Lord Bryce later approved their use as expressing his view, as follows:

"It is too soon to say what the war will bring in good or evil. But we can at least see, and perhaps see dimly, some of the things to be gained. One of the most desirable, I should say, will be the territorial integrity of small states—Belgium, Serbia, Switzerland, Holland. If this war means anything it means that a group of great states are banded together in protecting the small states against absorption and annihilation. The small state has been as useful in its way to the world's progress as the great state, and of incalculable value as a pacific barrier between antagonistic races. And yet the small state cannot exist under the rule of force and the survival of the strongest, as it has not the resources for vast military establishments; its very existence depends on the good faith of the great and powerful states in dealing with it. So that either the small state is going to disappear in this conflict, or is to emerge with far greater security than it had before, and with lasting assurances of its territorial integrity and the good faith of great states in dealing with it. I do not doubt that the result will be in favor of the small states, and that it will be one of the most beneficial results to come out of the conflict."

Lord Bryce was asked if this would not lead to some internationalizing of treaties so that it would become the duty of the great states to uphold treaty obligations toward the small state.

"Yes, that is what we all desire; that is what the article referred to was meant to advocate. It is one of the larger results which we may foresee with some hope of realization," said Lord Bryce. "This war has increasingly shown the need of an international code under which treaties are not alone respected by states party to them, but are part of an international code of honor which all states are bound to uphold. Under such a code any state disregarding a treaty obligation it has solemnly undertaken, offends not only the other contracting party to the obligation, but also the entire international bond of states leagued to uphold the sanctity of international compacts. And once that principle is firmly established, as I trust and believe it will be, then it follows that some means will be found by which the international code will be made effective through the universal moral influence, and it need by the universal force of the civilized nations of the world."

PARIS BOULEVARDS REGAINS MUCH GAIETY

Thousands of Soldiers From Front Mingle With Sunday Crowds.

Paris, Aug. 8.—(Associated Press Correspondence.)—The boulevards of Paris have come into their own. Thousands of soldiers now mingle with the usual wartime Sunday crowds—soldiers of all arms and in uniforms of all the regulation colors, bringing back some of the joy and animation that disappeared last summer. They are grouped with families and friends on the terraces of all the terraces of all the cafes, they whiz along all the streets in taxi-autos or in sumptuous limousines, they crowd the entrances to all the moving picture shows and promenade with the arms of women resting on their faded stained sleeves while little tots hang to their calloused necks or cling to their calloused hands.

They are the popular "pottus" (the hirsute) home from the front. It seemed last Sunday that all the 50,000 that left the trenches Saturday on four days leave were there.

It is believed these soldiers were returned from the front to check one phase of a systematic propaganda of discouragement that started at the beginning of the war and is still going on. The latest manifestation of it was a flood of anonymous letters to soldiers at the front informing them that while they were shedding their blood their wives were leading loose lives at home. This is supposed to be the reason for the decision of the war department to give four days leave to the men at the front in contingents of 50,000 at a time, so that they may look into the situation at home on their own account.

The anonymous character of much of the news that circulates gave the fabricators of false news a clear field, the ignorance in which the public is kept concerning the details of the military operations making it impossible for anyone to deny stories that are circulated; it also makes it difficult for the police to reach the culprits, though the secret service did succeed in tracing some of the work to an eccentric millionaire named Prouvost, living at Saint Raphael who had been convicted by a court martial and sentenced to prison.

After making a fortune out of insurance, Prouvost espoused the anarchist cause, published subversive pamphlets and journals and finally fell into the clutches of the Bonnot band whose sensational crimes excited Paris two years ago. False news began to circulate behind the lines early in the fall of last year; soldiers in hospitals and at the front received anonymous letters and circulars with significant headlines such as "They are deceiving us," "Germany has made peace overtures that we repudiate," "Our Generals have had entire regiments of our soldiers executed." All these documents glorified "great Germany." Names and addresses of soldiers in hospitals, names of refugees advertising for lost relatives, names of women advertising for employment—all those whose state of mind seemed to make them accessible to depressing news and suggestions received anonymous letters and circulars. A suspicious circumstance was that those sent to soldiers were postpaid, while most of the correspondence sent to them is postfree. Thousands were distributed by unknown means through the big department stores, slipped by mysterious hands under street doors and into private letter boxes; they were even scattered over the floors of postoffices and the cars of the subway.

It was finally discovered that the subjects treated and the language used were the same as in some proclamation dropped by German aviators upon positions held by troops of the second line of Basses in November. Finally a woman was detected dropping packets of letters into letter-boxes, and was shadowed. She received letters from St. Raphael in the department of the Var in the name of Herman, her real name being Donnadieu, wife of a well known anarchist, living with another anarchist named Bureau. All three were arrested and their correspondence was traced to the millionaire Prouvost. Prouvost admitted paying the postage on the letters and circulars but declared that he had no intention of engaging in a guilty propaganda. Behind Prouvost, Bureau and Madame Donnadieu the police think there was a well directed system of German espionage.

The Elclair declares that it has traced some of the false news circulated in Paris to naturalized Germans and gives the names of some of them.

A Mean Trick

The city youth secured a job with Farmer Jones. The morning after his arrival, promptly at 10 o'clock, the farmer rapped on his door and told him to get up. The youth protested.

"What for?" he asked, rubbing his eyes.

"Why, we're going to cut oats," replied the farmer.

"Are they wild oats?" queried the youth, "that you've got to sneak up on 'em in the dark?"—Circle and Success.

To Remind Him

"Why do you wear that rubber band about your finger?"

"I put that there to remind me of a perfectly good way to get rid of those who come in and take up my valuable time."

"Well, I've got to be trotting along. Good bye."

"Good-bye."—Houston Post.

Billy Mooney, after running a barber-shop in Centerville for two or three years, decided to become a dentist. His uncle, St., upon hearing of the decision, dropped in to talk it over.

"Yes, Billy," said he, "dentistry is about the easiest new job you could tackle. You know how to work the chair already, so the rest ought to come easy enough."—Houston Chronicle.

Brakeman Was Cured.

F. A. Wootsey, a railroad brakeman of Jacksonville, Texas, writes: "I was down with kidney trouble and rheumatism so bad I could hardly get up when I sat down. I had a backache all the time and was most tired of living. I saw Foley Kidney Pills advertised. I took some and after a short time I was thoroughly cured and am having no more trouble." They act promptly and help kidneys throw poisonous waste products out of the blood. Thousands have written similar letters. Sold everywhere.
